

Paper Money in Theory and Practice in History

International Workshop

The Origin of Paper Money in Theory and Practice

Hosted by the Economics Department City University London 8-9 April 2010

Call for Papers

Paper and fiat monies have been used as means of exchange for many centuries, and their circulation has been accompanied by the emergence of a series of theories attempting to explain the dilemmas that they pose. The objective of this workshop is to explore and illuminate the origin and acceptance of paper money and paper monetary systems. We will therefore focus on the development of monetary systems and monetary theory within the context of paper money by combining empirical historical research with research on the history of economic theory specifically on money and credit.

Abstracts of not more than 400 words should be sent to the workshop organizers by 15 December 2009.
