One can say many things about people trying to push pluralist or heterodox economics, but surely not that they are taking the easy route on the academic job market ;-). Especially against the backdrop of the often lamented and rightly criticized closure towards heterodox perspectives found in traditional econ departments, it is truly heartwarming to see that heterodox economists cannot be stopped in being active, creative and eager to contribute.

Some evidence for this claim is provided by the many inspiring and well-thought-out initiatives from young scholars - the next generation of heterodox and pluralist scholars – accumulating in this issue of the Newsletter. Among such initiatives are the 7th Pluralism Workshop<sup>4</sup> , the Rethinking Economics conference the 90th birthday of the General Theory<sup>5</sup> , the EAEPE pre-conference workshop<sup>6</sup> and summer school<sup>7</sup> , a workshop<sup>8</sup> on merits and perils of interdisciplinary research and efforts of "author collectives" to a get a better grasp on growth-dependence as an analytical concept<sup>9</sup> or provide novel approaches towards crafting introductory textbooks and lectures<sup>10</sup> .*

It is impressive what this 'next' generation manages to contribute to the development of the field and, indeed, such efforts create the impression that heterodox economics will – against some odds – find itself to be a flourishing and inspiring field of research (as well as a beacon for hope in political terms) also in the future.

While looking straight ahead into the future under these premises is truly motivating for me, it is always recommended to confront tunnel vision in early stages ;-). Hence, my suggestion is to complement this gaze into a bright future with having a look what happens sideways, i.e., to the left and right of our main paths. In my role as an editor of the Newsletter I have, for instance, subscribed to some Newsletters on Economic History in the course of the last year to get a better understanding of economic historians interests and approaches overlaps with those of heterodox economists. And indeed, I found some traces and try to now regularly include them in the Newsletter to broaden the vista and to facilitate the creation of new ties and networks. One such example found below is a workshop on "Patterns of Global Economic Integration and Disintegration"<sup>11</sup>, which, in my humble view, resonates with key heterodox intuitions.

Similarly, it happens sometimes, that sensible and interesting contributions are published in mainstream economics journals. Recent examples include this paper on alternative estimates for the macroeconomic costs of climate change<sup>12</sup> (in the QJE), an article of the economics of W.E.B du Bois<sup>13</sup> as well as this topically interesting recent issue<sup>14</sup> in the Journal of Economic Literature as well as this undercover report<sup>15</sup> on fraud and corruption in the headquarters of large academic publishers, which all could be of interest to heterodox economists in one way or the other.

All the best,

Jakob

Admittedly, the last one of these was already announced in our last issue ;-)

Call for Papers

7th Pluralumn* Workshop (Online, August 2026)

26-27 August, 2026 — Online

The Pluralumn* group of the German Network for Pluralism in Economics calls for papers and presentations for its 7th Scientific Workshop. The workshop is open to all young scholars and early-career researchers, such as advanced Bachelor and Master students, PhD students and PostDocs. This year, the Pluralumn* Workshop will take place online.

The organizers welcome papers that take a pluralist approach to economics and from any field or school of thought within economics. The organizers welcome contributions based on qualitative and quantitative approaches, mixed-methods designs or otherwise non-standard methodologies. Likewise, the organizers encourage submissions from adjacent disciplines such as sociology, political science, psychology, history and philosophy that discuss economic phenomena or aim to enhance economic methods and methodology.

The aim of the Pluralumn* Workshop is to bring together young scholars and early-career researchers to enable exchange between colleagues one would rarely meet at specialized conferences and symposia.

The workshop will offer two distinct presentation formats depending on the state of the research to be presented:

- Formal talk: Submit and present a paper draft (for far developed projects).
- Idea consolidation café: In this collaborative workshop, research ideas can be discussed and receive feedback on their topic and method.

Participation without presentation is also possible. The conference language is English. The Pluralumn* Workshop is free of charge. The organizers aim to structure the online Workshop in a way that accommodates participants across multiple time zones. To this end, the organizers will collect information on participants' availability during the application process. Further information will be provided with acceptance notification.

Interdisciplinary Research in a Disciplinary World – Structural Conditions, Lived Experiences, and the Promise of Knowledge Beyond Boundaries (Vienna, November 2026)

5 - 6 November — Vienna, Austria

The organization of knowledge production is itself historical. The firm boundaries separating academic disciplines – economics from sociology, natural from social sciences, quantitative from qualitative inquiry – are not eternal givens but relatively recent institutional settlements. It was only in the mid-20th century that disciplinary specialization – shared funding agencies, journals, conferences, career tracks – hardened into the structure we now take for granted. Today, that structure is under pressure. On the one hand, we live in an era of multiple crisis: the simultaneous convergence of ecological breakdown, economic precarity, geopolitical reorientation, democratic erosion, and public health shocks. The confluence of these crises – ecological, economic, social, and political – is not a novel condition but a structural feature of the current global order, demanding analytical approaches that can grasp their interconnection rather than treating them in isolation (Kelecha 2026). Because of the intertwined and complex nature of these crises, analysing issues only through the lens of one discipline often is not able to provide the necessary solutions. On the other hand, the epistemic response to this challenge – interdisciplinary research – runs headlong into structural resistance within the very academic system that is supposed to produce it. The call for interdisciplinarity grows louder even as the conditions enabling it grow more precarious.

When interdisciplinary collaboration succeeds, it produces outcomes that no single discipline alone could achieve (Bruine de Bruin et al. 2019). And yet the structural conditions remain deeply unfavorable: Although EU research and science policy provided incentives for interdisciplinary work, tensions emerge over resources, labour, and careers (Müller and Kaltenbrunner 2019). Interdisciplinary work is harder to fund and to publish, researchers who pursue it face early career impediments, and short-term funding structures incentivize quick solutions over the slower, integrative approaches such work requires (Berkes et al. 2024, Vladova et al. 2025).

The contradictions between the rhetoric of interdisciplinarity as a solution for the multiple crisis and the reality of its institutional conditions are not merely bureaucratic inconveniences. They intersect with deeper dynamics of knowledge production under academic capitalism: the financialization of universities, the precarization of academic careers, and the structural pressures that marginalize precisely those scholarly voices and epistemic ambitions most oriented toward complexity and critique.

As part of the interdisciplinary research project EIROC1, we have experienced both the intellectual richness and the structural obstacles of this kind of work firsthand. In this concluding workshop, we turn the lens on the meta-level: what does it mean to be an interdisciplinary scholar in a disciplinary world? Our aims are twofold: we invite practitioners' reports (Praxisberichte) from researchers across all disciplines sharing their own experiences of working interdisciplinarily: the frictions and rewards, the career costs and intellectual gains as well as theoretical and empirical contributions on the structural conditions and systemic challenges shaping interdisciplinary research, from higher education studies, science and technology studies, research policy, and all other related fields. Together, these contributions will allow us to build, in a grounded way, toward an understanding of what genuine structural support for interdisciplinary inquiry would look like.

We welcome:

- Practitioners' reports of lived experience with interdisciplinary work – its rewards, frictions, and compromises
- Theoretical or empirical contributions on the conditions for and challenges of interdisciplinary research, from all disciplines and non-disciplines
- Contributions connecting interdisciplinarity to questions of academic labor, precarity, and the political economy of knowledge production

The workshop combines paper presentations and structured discussion rounds with interactive workshops designed to facilitate exchange across disciplines. The evening of the first day will close with a distinguished panel discussion on a question that is at once institutional and political: how can interdisciplinarity not merely be demanded, but structurally enabled.

Submission of Abstracts: 200 words; via e-mail to theresa.hager@jku.at<sup>19</sup>, laura.porak@jku.at<sup>20</sup> and susanna.azevedo@univie.ac.at<sup>21</sup> ;

The workshop takes place on the 5th and 6th of November at the Austrian Academy of Sciences in Vienna, and is part of the concluding event of the EIROC project. There are no workshop fees; however, unfortunately, accommodation and travel expenses cannot be covered by the workshop organizers.

International Conference on Daniel Bensaïd's Thought (Paris, November 2026)

27-28 November, 2026 — Paris, France

Symposium “Daniel Bensaïd Alive”

Daniel Bensaïd died on 12 January 2010. A philosopher and activist, a leading figure of May 1968 and of the revolutionary left in France for over four decades, and a leader of the Communist League (which became the Revolutionary Communist League a few years later) and the Fourth International since their founding, he had embarked on a project to rebuild Marxism from the 1980s onwards.

<sup>19</sup><mailto:theresa.hager@jku.at>

At the very moment when, with the collapse of the Eastern Bloc, capitalism seemed to be triumphing, and as farewells to the proletariat were becoming increasingly common, Daniel Bensaïd returned to Marx, in particular to Capital. This return was by no means a desperate search for a doctrine, let alone a dogma; rather, it was a matter of rediscovering Marx's approach, that of the "ruthless critique of all that exists". The fundamental contradictions of capitalism had by no means disappeared, and the great crisis of 2007–2008 was to prove right those who, like Daniel, had insisted on resuming the critique of political economy.

Whilst the 'end of history' had been decreed and the class struggle declared obsolete in the wake of the American triumphalism of the time, Daniel Bensaïd worked, alongside Walter Benjamin, to restore the 'tradition of the oppressed' and the necessity of watching out for possible turning points. At a time when history was being embalmed and reduced to mere 'places of memory', he embarked on a heterodox reappropriation of the French Revolution and the figure of Joan of Arc. At a time when the impossibility of any alternative was being trumpeted, he invited us to keep alive the strategic thinking of crisis and rupture.

Daniel Bensaïd has thus bequeathed to us a very rich political and theoretical legacy, but one "without owners or instructions for use", as he often said of Marx: a legacy that is only just beginning to be explored, even though there is already, on a global scale, a flourishing of studies on his thought. The aim of this conference is precisely to initiate an initial comprehensive discussion of this work and to stimulate new interpretations of his oeuvre, enabling the development of a genuine field of research, transcending national and disciplinary boundaries, centered on the themes and hypotheses that Daniel Bensaïd had begun to identify.

All aspects of Daniel Bensaïd's thought, whether directly linked to the political situation or not, may be addressed at this conference, but the organizers particularly welcome proposals falling within the following themes:

- Strategy, messianism and utopia
- Marx, Capital, crises
- Discordances of time and space
- Wars and fascism
- Contingency and necessity
- Nation, internationalism and cosmopolitanism
- Ecology and Communism

- Class, race and gender
- Philosophies of defeat and melancholy
- Activism and intellectuals

Mini-Conference on "Distributive Consequences of Climate and Environmental Policy"
(London, November 2026)

12-13 November, 2026 — London, UK

Conference theme: Who Pays, Who Benefits? The Distributive Consequences of Climate and Environmental Policy

The LSE's Global School of Sustainability<sup>23</sup> , in collaboration with the Sustainable Social Policy and Welfare States Research Hub<sup>24</sup> at the Department of Social Policy<sup>25</sup> , are accepting paper proposals for a 2-day mini-conference to be held on the 12-13th November 2026.

Climate change is not only an environmental crisis but a distributive one. As governments pursue decarbonisation and protect the environment, the costs and benefits of policy fall unevenly across regions, income groups, sectors, and countries. Carbon pricing can impose regressive burdens on lower-income households. Green industrial policy creates new economic winners while displacing established industries and their workforces. Communities in the Global South face the greatest physical risks from climate change and environmental degradation while often contributing least to its causes and possessing the fewest resources to adapt. These distributional dynamics are generating new patterns of contestation that speak to emerging debates in social policy and climate politics.

This mini-conference brings together an international community of researchers to examine the policy and politics of climate change through a distributive lens. It asks who bears the costs of decarbonisation and environmental (in)action, who captures its benefits, and how these distributional stakes shape the coalitions, public attitudes, and institutional arrangements that determine whether ambitious climate action is politically sustainable. By centring questions of inequality, compensation, social protection, and political feasibility, the mini-conference positions climate policy as a core concern for the future of social policy scholarship.

Themes

The organizers particularly invite paper submissions addressing any of the following five thematic areas, although this is not a strict requirement. Submissions that bridge themes, take comparative or cross-regional perspectives, or engage substantively with the Global South are particularly welcome.

1. Inequality and the politics of climate policy
2. Cities, public goods, and climate adaptation
3. Welfare states, eco-social policy, and the green transition
4. Climate risk, migration, and vulnerability
5. International and comparative political economy of climate action

Format

The mini-conference runs over two days and combines paper panels with structured reflections from invited scholars. Each thematic block consists of a traditional panel of paper presentations with Q&A, followed by an extended reflection from the invited speaker for that block as well as time for joint discussion on current and future research in these areas.

There is no conference fee and refreshments and food will be provided during the conference, as well as a conference dinner.

Confirmed Speakers

- Federica Genovese (University of Oxford)
- Vally Koubi (ETH Zurich/University of Bern)
- Aseem Prakash (Georgetown University)
- Isabelle Stadelmann-Steffen (University of Bern)
- Alice Xu (University of Pennsylvania)

Poster Track

Depending on the volume of submissions and available funding, the organizers may also organise a poster session as part of the program. Applicants who would like to be considered for the poster track in addition to the paper panels should indicate this on their submission. Indicating an interest in presenting at the poster session will not affect the decision made about your paper presentation submission.

Funding for Early Career Researchers

Limited support is available for early career researchers without access to research funding travelling to London for the mini-conference. Applicants who would like to be considered for accommodation support should indicate this on their submission and provide a brief justification of need.

Applications

To apply, please submit:

- A paper title and abstract of up to 500 words
- An indication of the primary thematic block your paper addresses
- Whether you would like to be considered for the poster track
- Whether you wish to be considered for ECR support

Applications should be submitted through this form<sup>26</sup>.

Patterns of Global Economic Integration and Disintegration (Paris, November 2026)

19-20 November, 2026 — Paris, France

Conference Theme: Patterns of Global Economic Integration and Disintegration

A conference jointly hosted by Sciences Po and the University of Chicago Center in Paris

We gladly announce a call for papers for a conference on the historical foundations of economic integration and disintegration from the mid-nineteenth century to the present.

<sup>27</sup><https://www.lse.ac.uk/social-policy/research/research-clusters/sustainable-social-policy/events/mini-conference-november-2026>

We invite submissions that explore the concrete forces shaping, propelling, constraining, or reversing economic interconnectedness across the world. Despite the development of a voluminous literature on topics such as trade expansion, capital mobility, and cross-border production in the social sciences, historical perspectives over the past forty years have rarely made the global economy the subject of dedicated analysis.

The straightjackets undergirding common narratives – “free market” against “state intervention”, “free trade” against “mercantilism,” or “financial liberalization” against “regulation” – betray the need to explore the diversity of forms global economic integration or disintegration may assume. We believe that detailed archival research and a distinct historical framework can elucidate the heterogeneity of linkages in the global economy over time.

We seek contributions that more precisely map the forces compelling economic integration, examine why such connections have repeatedly frayed or been disrupted, and move beyond common binary or linear narratives on the topic.

View the Full Call for Papers<sup>28</sup>

The conference is designed to provide a platform for PhD candidates and early-career scholars to present their work. While the conference aims to be genuinely interdisciplinary, preference will be given to submissions drawing on primary sources.

The conference will take place over two days, with one day hosted at Sciences Po Paris and the other at the University of Chicago Center in Paris. It will open and close with two keynote lectures, which will be announced at a later stage.

The organizing committee may not be able to fully cover travel and lodging expenses for all speakers. Applicants are encouraged to note any funding needs when submitting their proposals; requests will be reviewed based on available financial resources.

The publication of a volume/series of articles collecting the contributions to the conference is envisaged.

Rethinking Economics with John Maynard Keynes (Amiens, December 2026)

2-3 December, 2026 — Amiens, France

Conference theme: Rethinking Economics with John Maynard Keynes: 90 years after the publication of the General Theory

This conference is organized by the Laboratory of Economics, Finance, Management and Innovation (LEFMI) at the University of Picardie Jules Verne, in partnership with Cahiers d'Économie Politique / Papers in Political Economy and the Association for the Development of Keynesian Studies (ADEK).

In 1988, Cahiers d'Économie Politique / Papers in Political Economy devoted a double issue (nos. 14–15) to the fiftieth anniversary of The General Theory of Employment, Interest and Money, focusing on the evolution of its interpretations and comparing contemporary readings with John Maynard Keynes's earlier and later writings. Ten years later, another double issue (nos. 30–31) addressed the relationship between Keynes's economics and philosophy.

On the occasion of the ninetieth anniversary of The General Theory, this conference aims, first, to provide a “state-of-the-art” assessment of Keynesian scholarship in its theoretical and methodological diversity and, second, to analyze its interactions with other traditions of economic thought.

To address these aims, contributions will be organized around three main analytical perspectives:

- the contemporary relevance of the concepts and analytical tools developed in The General Theory;
- the evolution of Keynesian traditions; and
- Keynes and contemporary capitalism.

Submissions in French or English are welcome. Contributions may fall within the fields of economic theory, the history of economic thought, economic philosophy, and interdisciplinary approaches.

A selection of papers presented at the conference will be considered for publication in a special issue of Cahiers d'Économie Politique / Papers in Political Economy and will be subject to the journal's standard double-blind peer-review process.

12th EAEPE Pre-Conference Workshop for Young Scholars: The (not so) Invisible Power Structures in Global Transformations of Labor (Lausanne, September 2026)

9-11 September 2026 — Lausanne, Switzerland

EAEPE seeks to institutionalize and deepen the involvement of and the exchange with young scholars and student initiatives at the association's annual conference. One of the key forums for young scholars at EAEPE is the annual pre-conference that comprises a series of workshops by distinguished scholars, accompanied by social space to interact and network. Organized by a team of young scholars, the pre-conference was first launched in Genova (2015). This year, EAEPE and the Philosophy of Economics Working Group of the INET YSI are putting their forces together to organize the 12th pre-conference workshop which will be held on 8 September 2026 in Lausanne.

We are pleased to announce the following talks:

Gender-responsive Employment Policies

By Valeria Esquivel (Coordinator of the Gender in Employment Group, ILO)

Labour and Informality under Post-Colonial Capitalism

By Surbhi Kesar (SOAS University of London)

Globalization & Labour

By Jean-Christophe Graz (University of Lausanne)

The purpose of this year's EAEPE YSI pre-conference workshop is to reconnect labor analysis with questions of dependency, global value chains, social reproduction, and ecological extraction. Rather than treating these dimensions as peripheral, they are positioned as constitutive of contemporary labor regimes and of the uneven transformations shaping work across regions and social groups. By foregrounding these perspectives, the pre-conference aims to foster dialogue between feminist, post-colonial, ecological, and institutional approaches to labor within the EAEPE community.

Following the talks, participants will have the chance to participate in group discussions and activities to approach the topic from different angles. Furthermore, there will be a get-together session where young scholars will introduce themselves and their research interests and get the chance to get feedback from and pair up with other young and senior scholars. Coffee break, lunch, and a social dinner will provide further space to connect and warm up for the main conference. All pre-conference participants are warmly invited to participate at EAEPE's main conference.

Application to the Pre-Conference & Registration fees:

You can apply for the pre-conference during the registration process for the main conference<sup>32</sup>. Please register<sup>33</sup> for the main conference by choosing the 'PhD registration for members.' IIPP Forum: Rethinking the State: State Capabilities, Missions and Governing the Common Good (London, June 2026)

16–17 June 2026 — London, UK

Across the world, governments are confronting a new generation of interconnected challenges—from climate change and economic transformation to inequality, technological disruption and geopolitical instability. Meeting these challenges requires more than policy ambition. It requires capable public institutions able to shape markets, coordinate across sectors and deliver long-term public value.

As UCL marks its bicentenary (UCL200)—celebrating two hundred years of advancing knowledge in service of society—the Rethinking the State Forum 2026 contributes to this milestone by bringing UCL’s research and policy engagement into conversation with global policymakers, scholars and practitioners. The UCL IIPP Forum reflects UCL’s commitment not only to producing knowledge but to helping shape the ideas, institutions and policies needed to address the defining challenges of our time.

Drawing on IIPP’s research and collaborations with governments around the world, the UCL IIPP Forum explores how states can build the capabilities required to drive transformation. The discussions examine how public institutions can move beyond reactive policy-making to actively design and govern economies around collective goals.

Across two days of discussion, the Forum highlights practical and intellectual advances in rethinking the role of the state—from building public sector capabilities in cities, to developing new policy tools for mission-oriented transformation, to strengthening international cooperation for a just green transition.

Together, these conversations reflect IIPP’s core agenda and UCL’s broader public mission: rebuilding state capacity to shape markets, influence public policy and govern economies in ways that create public value and serve the common good. View the entire programme at a glance.<sup>36</sup>

<sup>37</sup><https://www.ucl.ac.uk/bartlett/public-purpose/about/events-and-engagement/iipp-forum-2026-rethinking-state>

The Otto Brenner Stiftung is hosting the MEHR Festival in Frankfurt from 16 to 19 June 2026. Across five venues, participants from academia, trade unions, activism, and culture will come together to discuss pressing issues around housing and vacancy, economic democracy, democratic digitalization, and solidarity-based migration policy.

With over 50 events, the festival bridges debate and practice through lectures, workshops, and creative formats such as hackathons — all aimed at developing concrete solutions and building new alliances.

Participation is free of charge; registration is required.

The ” Council for Economic Democracy<sup>38</sup> ” (Rat für Wirtschaftsdemokratie) will feature contributions from Justus Henze (communia), Rabea Baerfelde (Centre for Social Critique, Humboldt-Universität zu Berlin), Vanessa Barth (IG Metall, Grundsatz), and Tom Krebs (University of Mannheim). Topics will include pathways toward an active industrial policy, a democratically governed energy transition, expanded workplace co-determination, and democratic planning. The session provides space to discuss strategies as well as current and future projects.

An open cultural programme on 17 and 19 June — featuring city walks, readings, and open-air cinema — invites both festival participants and Frankfurt residents to engage with the festival’s themes.

Rethinking Economics Summer School Switzerland (Chandolin, August 2026)

8-15 August, 2026 — Chandolin, Switzerland

Join the 5th Summer School by Rethinking Economics Switzerland: Smash the Status Quo: Creating a Care-Centred Economy taking place from the 8th to 15th of August in Chandolin, Switzerland.

Another economy is possible, one where economic power means the capacity to care for one another and for the planet. An economy of solidarity, not extraction. At this year's Summer School, we ask how today's economic structures keep reproducing inequality and ecological harm, and what it would take to put care at the centre instead. Over one week, students, activists and critical researchers come together to learn, exchange, and build collective strategies.

The programme: Mornings introduce key heterodox schools of thought — Feminist, Marxist, and Ecological Economics among them — with space to discuss and to work on concrete projects in smaller groups. Afternoons feature guest speakers on how movements can build the power to reorganise economies around people, communities, and ecosystems.

Participants are also invited to lead their own sessions and workshops at the intersection of activism and academia, sparking new projects and collaborative research while challenging existing academic hierarchies. No prior expertise is required, just curiosity and a willingness to challenge dominant narratives.

Applications are open now<sup>43</sup> .

Turin Humanities Programme Summer School 2026 (Turin, September 2026)

17-19 September, 2026 — Turin, Italy

Summer School theme: Needs, Justice, and the Wealth of Nations: The Moral and Material Foundations of Political Economy in the European World (1500–1800)

The Turin Humanities Programme and Fondazione 1563 are pleased to invite doctoral students and early career researchers to submit their applications to the Summer School Needs, Justice, and the Wealth of Nations: The Moral and Material Foundations of Political Economy in the European World (1500–1800).

The emergence of political economy in early modern Europe was not the product of a single intellectual breakthrough, but of sustained attempts to reconcile material expansion with moral, legal, and political constraints. From the management of scarcity and subsistence to the governance of trade, empire, and population, early modern thinkers confronted a central question: how should wealth be created, distributed, and justified within society?

This Summer school explores the debates and policies that gave rise to political economy as a field of inquiry. Rather than treating it as a precursor to modern economics, participants will examine political economy as a historically situated set of practices and arguments, embedded in specific institutional, imperial, and ecological contexts. These took related yet disparate forms, ranging from the much-maligned shorthand of “mercantilism” to self-conscious traditions such as Cameralism, Colbertism, Physiocracy, and economia civile.

Bringing together approaches from intellectual history, economic history, and the history of science, the Summer School will focus on three interconnected axes:

1. Subsistence, Sociability, and the Problem of Order How did early modern societies confront the tensions between scarcity, market dependence, and political stability? In what ways did concerns over provisioning, luxury, and commercial competition shape understandings of social order?
2. Production, Power, and the Uneven Wealth of Nations Why did some nations prosper while others lagged behind? How did contemporaries understand the relationship between production, trade, and state power in a competitive international order?
3. Rights, Justice, and the Legitimacy of Economic Life How were inequality, property, and market outcomes justified or contested within emerging frameworks of rights and justice? What moral limits were placed on economic activity, and by whom?

To apply for the Summer School, prospective participants should submit a brief academic CV (max. 2 pages), an abstract of the research they wish to present (max. 400 words) and a short essay on why they would like to attend the Summer School (max. 200 words).

Please, upload these materials within the application form<sup>45</sup> .

Job Postings

Goethe Universität, Germany

Job Position: Research Associate (PhD candidate) (m/f/d)

The Faculty of Social Sciences at the Goethe University Frankfurt, within the Chair of International Relations and International Political Economy (Prof. Dr. Andreas Nölke), the position of Research Associate (PhD candidate) (m/f/d) (E 13 TV-G-U, 75% part time) is to be filled as of 01.10.2026, for a fixed term of 3.5 years (optionally prolonged to 4 years). The salary is based on the German public sector pay scale (TV-G-U) applicable at Goethe University.

Responsibilities

The position is part of the DFG-funded research project “Financial Empire: China’s Construction of an Alternative Financial System” led by Dr. Johannes Petry. The project examines the transformation of global financial structures in the context of increasing geopolitical tensions and analyzes China’s efforts to build an alternative, Sinocentric financial system. It focuses on processes of policy learning, the emergence of imperial practices, and their role in reshaping global patterns of power, autonomy, and dependence.

The project is part of the DFG Research Unit “Learning Empire. Autonomy, Dependence, and China’s Emerging Imperial Practices” (FOR 5913/1), a large collaborative initiative to study China’s changing international practices under the conditions of a world order in transition funded by the German Research Foundation (DFG). The Research Unit comprises eight projects across German universities and research institutions (see: www.learning-empire.com<sup>47</sup>).

The successful candidate will work closely within the project team and contribute to all work packages. Core responsibilities include:

- Conducting and analyzing qualitative interviews with financial market actors, regulators, and other experts in international financial centres (e.g., Shanghai, Hong Kong, Singapore, London, New York)
- Analyzing policy documents and contributing to the development of datasets on China’s international financial activities
- Supporting project management and organizing workshops and research activities

- Contributing to academic publications and conference presentations with the goal of completing a PhD

Requirements

Applicants must hold an above-average university degree (Master’s or equivalent) in political science or a related field. We expect solid knowledge in international and comparative political economy, particularly in the areas of global finance and/or the political economy of China, as well as a strong interest in topics such as state capitalism, geoeconomics, and financial market infrastructures.

Experience with, or a strong interest in, qualitative research methods—especially interviews, document analysis, and potentially ethnographic approaches—is required. Willingness to conduct international fieldwork and excellent English language skills (written and spoken) are essential.

Desirable qualifications include knowledge of China’s financial system, initial experience with quantitative data analysis or financial data (e.g., Bloomberg, LSEG Workspace), and Chinese language skills. An interest in academic publishing, the ability to work independently, and strong teamwork skills are also expected. German language proficiency are an asset, but not mandatory.

What we offer

The position offers the opportunity to pursue a PhD within an internationally connected and theoretically innovative research project at the intersection of political economy, geopolitics, and China studies, while being embedded in an excellent research environment. In addition, it provides access to international networks as well as opportunities for extensive field research in global financial centres.

Supporting early-career researchers is a central priority of the “Learning Empire” Research Unit. It provides structured doctoral training, including joint supervision across projects and a mentoring scheme. The program emphasizes the development of transferable academic skills, research practices, and integration into the group’s shared intellectual and methodological framework. This is complemented by a dedicated workshop program, writing retreats, and active participation in collaborative events, fostering both professional development and a strong interdisciplinary research community.

Applications (cover letter, CV, two writing samples, copies of academic certificates and transcripts) should be submitted electronically, quoting the reference number (06/2026), by 20.06.2026, to the Dean of the Faculty of Social Sciences at Goethe University Frankfurt via email: dekanat.fb03-bewerbungen@soz.uni-frankfurt.de<sup>48</sup>. Selected candidates will be invited to interviews in Frankfurt in early/mid-July. For further infor-

Bankers in the Ivory Tower: The Troubling Rise of Financiers in US Higher Education

by Charlie Eaton — 2022, Chicago University Press

Elite colleges have long played a crucial role in maintaining social and class status in America, while public universities have offered a major stepping stone to new economic opportunities. However, as Charlie Eaton reveals in Bankers in the Ivory Tower, finance has played a central role in the widening inequality in recent decades, both in American higher education and in American society at large.

With federal and state funding falling short, the US higher education system has become increasingly dependent on financial markets and the financiers that mediate them. Beginning in the 1980s, the government, colleges, students, and their families took on multiple new roles as financial investors, borrowers, and brokers. The turn to finance, however, has yielded wildly unequal results. At the top, ties to Wall Street help the most elite private schools achieve the greatest endowment growth through hedge fund investments and the support of wealthy donors. At the bottom, takeovers by private equity transform for-profit colleges into predatory organizations that leave disadvantaged students with massive loan debt and few educational benefits. And in the middle, public universities are squeezed between incentives to increase tuition and pressures to maintain access and affordability. Eaton chronicles these transformations, making clear for the first time just how tight the links are between powerful financiers and America's unequal system of higher education.

Handbook of Climate Change and Financial Markets

edited by Guglielmo Maria Caporale — 2026 Edward Elgar Publishing

This comprehensive Handbook analyses the effects of climate change on financial markets, examining the policy measures required to mitigate its negative impact on market efficiency and various asset classes such as stocks, bonds, currencies and other financial hedges.

The chapters review the existing literature in the field, carrying out advanced econometric investigations to shed light on the implications of physical climate change and provide relevant policy advice. The contributors focus on the reduction of greenhouse gas emissions, providing detailed insight into green finance, sustainable investment and increasingly necessary ESG (environmental, social and governance) measures. They explore a range of key topics including the role of monetary and macroprudential policies, carbon taxes and allowances and improvements in national governance systems. They also compare strategies across global, local, public and corporate levels, identifying the most efficient methods of financing a sustainable green transition.

The Handbook of Climate Change and Financial Markets is a valuable resource for scholars and students of financial, macro, monetary, environmental and energy economics. It is also beneficial for investors requiring appropriate portfolio and risk management strategies, as well as authorities tasked with climate change policies.

Handbook on Economic Growth and the Environment

edited by Jungho Baek — 2026, Edward Elgar Publishing

This timely Handbook explores the ways in which countries can achieve economic growth without environmental harm. It brings together case studies from around the world to examine how governments, industries and communities can reduce pollution and use resources more wisely.

Chapters highlight the challenges and opportunities of balancing economic progress with protecting the planet, revealing that sustainable growth is possible with the right tools and improved cooperation. They explore topics including clean energy, carbon taxes, decarbonization, green budgeting and local policies to examine how different regions, including Alaska, East Asia and Europe, are adapting to environmental pressures. Presenting both global and regional perspectives, expert authors investigate sustainability challenges facing industries including textiles, manufacturing, energy and agriculture. The Handbook shows that, while there is no universal solution, there are practical strategies that exist to guide efforts toward a greener and more resilient future.

Interdisciplinary in scope, this Handbook is an essential resource for scholars and students of environmental economics, sustainability studies and development studies. Policymakers, private sector consultants, green economy practitioners and NGOs will also benefit from its valuable insights.

US Business Cycles 1954–2020: Sources, Symptoms, Solutions

by John T. Harvey — 2025, Cambridge University Press

What causes cyclical downturns that wreak havoc on our lives? Most economists will say that they result from random external shocks and that, without these, the economy would sail along beautifully. In US Business Cycles 1954-2020, John Harvey argues that overwhelming evidence points to an internal dynamic, one related to the behavior of economic agents that generates what we call a business cycle. He draws on the work of past Post-Keynesian and Institutionalist scholars to create a current theory of business cycles, one that treats them as systemic and not the result of random chance. He addresses not only unemployment and bankruptcies that are the immediate consequence of the business cycle, but critical social challenges like climate change and elderly care. Examining an extensive history of US fluctuations, Harvey fills a long-standing void within the discipline by offering an alternative theory of income, employment, and price determination.

- Offers a theory of employment, output, and inflation based on the manner in which real-world behavior and institutions operate
- Provides a historical review of US business cycles 1954-2020
- Includes a technical appendix which offers a useful summary in more technical language for the economist or advanced economics student

United Nations Facing Global Economic Disorder: Assessing 20 Policy Proposals

by Raúl de Arriba — published by Palgrave Macmillan Cham 2026

In an era of mounting global crises—from climate change and inequality to debt, migration, and artificial intelligence—the role of multilateralism has never been more urgent. United Nations Facing Global Economic Disorder: Assessing 20 Policy Proposals brings together twenty international experts to critically examine how the United Nations addresses today’s most pressing economic, social, and environmental challenges. Clear, rigorous, and accessible, each chapter explores a major global issue, evaluates the UN’s proposed solutions, and dissects what works—and what doesn’t—in the search for a fairer and more effective multilateral system. Essential reading for students, researchers, policymakers, and anyone concerned with the future of global governance.

Why We Must Work: Economic Freedom, Fulfilling Work, and Workplace Democracy

by Jon D. Wisman — 2026, Palgrave-Macmillan

Humans evolved to experience work as pleasurable and continued to find it pleasurable for the first 98% of our history, often likening it to play. The negative associations we see now with “work” stem from the extreme inequality and exploitation accompanying the rise of the state 5,500 years ago. Consequently, today many people view work negatively, seeing it as a means to gain income to enable consumption as opposed to serving as a means for creativity, community, and self-fulfillment.

In Why We Must Work, Jon D. Wisman draws upon economics, philosophy, evolutionary psychology, social anthropology, and history to explore how work has been experienced and understood over the course of history. In addressing current conditions, he notes the absurdity that, while we live with unparalleled abundance, some workers suffer unemployment and most are not free in their workplaces, often being bossed about. Equally absurd, given our abundance, is the extreme inequality that results in pervasive insecurity, stress, and pessimism. Laissez-faire ideology legitimates the public policies that generate this inequality and these work conditions while depicting ever greater consumption as opposed to meaningful work as the means to greater happiness.

Wisman offers an attractive alternative vision of our future, grounded in two reforms to make work again fulfilling: guaranteed employment and workplace democracy. Guaranteed employment would provide security and eliminate poverty while providing everyone with the social and self-respect of being a productive member of society. Measures to bring about worker ownership and control of their firms would bring freedom and democracy to the workplace. Both reforms conform to cherished values while preserving capitalism's two principal institutions of private property and markets.

Ökonomie verstehen (Understanding Economics)

by Andreas Nölke and Michael Schedelik 2025, UTB

This pluralist introduction systematically juxtaposes neoclassical and (post-) Keynesian perspectives on the most important topics covered by economics textbooks. It is written in German and is well accessible for students without previous knowledge of economics, for example beginner students in political economy, economic sociology, economic geography or school teachers.

German description: Wie lassen sich Wirtschaftskrisen erklären? Welche Faktoren beeinflussen Ungleichheit? Und welche Alternativen gibt es zum Wachstumsparadigma? Dieses Lehrbuch führt verständlich und fundiert in zentrale wirtschaftliche Themen ein – von Arbeitslosigkeit über Finanzmärkte bis zur Umweltökonomie. Es vermittelt verschiedene Wirtschaftstheorien aus pluralistischer Perspektive und verknüpft diese mit aktuellen gesellschaftlichen Herausforderungen. So vermittelt das Buch Studierenden und zukünftigen Lehrkräften die Fähigkeit, wirtschaftspolitische Debatten kompetent zu verfolgen, die vorgebrachten Argumente einzuordnen und eigenständige Positionen zu entwickeln. Im Unterschied zu den gängigen wirtschaftswissenschaftlichen Lehrbüchern

Heterodox Graduate Programs, Scholarships and Grants

Pluralist Master in Economic Analysis (Rome)

The Master's Degree in Scienze Economiche (LM-56) at Roma Tre University aims to provide advanced knowledge of economic theory, business principles, and mathematical and statistical tools that enable students to interpret and analyze issues related to the functioning of economic systems—whether at the macroeconomic level or at the level of individual economic agents or groups of economic agents—and thereby propose possible solutions to the problems identified.

Students can choose between three study tracks:

- Economic Analysis
- Finance and Macroeconomic Dynamics
- Structural Change, Inequality and Employment (Master EPOG)

The program covers topics such as production and employment, income distribution, public intervention in the economy, the relationship between the real economy and finance, and economic and monetary policies in Italy and Europe.

The EPOG track is part of the Erasmus Mundus Joint Master Degree Programme and includes courses taught in English as well as a study period at a partner university. Students in this track can obtain a double degree. In addition, a limited number of students from the Economic Analysis and Finance and Macroeconomic Dynamics tracks can, through selection, spend their second year at Université Sorbonne Paris Nord and obtain a second Master's degree in “International Macroeconomics and Financialisation.”

The course places strong emphasis on both theoretical and empirical economic analysis and prepares graduates for research, analysis, management, and coordination roles in companies, public institutions, and private organizations. Graduates may also continue with postgraduate studies such as Master's programs or a PhD in Economics.

It is possible to complete the degree in english.

University of Sheffield, UK

Funded PhD Project: Apprenticeship Provision in South Yorkshire: Improving Opportunities for Young People

This project seeks to examine the questions of ‘how can regional institutions improve access to high-quality apprenticeship opportunities for young people? Apprenticeships can support school-to-work transitions and address skills shortages, but provision in England remains uneven and difficult to navigate, particularly for young people in the “missing middle” who do not progress directly to higher education.

This PhD project examines apprenticeship provision in South Yorkshire and how local and regional government – specifically the South Yorkshire Mayoral Combined Authority (SYMCA) - can support better coordination between employers, education providers and policy actors. It asks how provision can be improved in both quality and quantity, and how young people can be supported to access and complete apprenticeships. The project will ideally draw on theoretical and conceptual ideas from the disciplines of critical political economy, human geography, urban studies, and employment relations.

The successful candidate will contribute to debates in political economy, labour market studies, vocational education and regional development. The project will use a mixed-methods design. The project is expected to include qualitative interviews with young people, employers and local labour market actors, alongside a quantitative element looking at labour market and apprenticeship data. The quantitative element will be broad, policy-focused and supported through doctoral training; applicants are not expected to arrive with advanced technical expertise.

You will be supervised by an interdisciplinary team:

- Dr Edward Yates - political economy, youth employment, job quality and regional labour markets.
- Professor Jason Heyes - skills, vocational education, training and labour market policy.
- Professor Vania Sena - entrepreneurship, enterprise, innovation and applied quantitative research.

You will be based in Sheffield University Management School and linked to the Centre for Decent Work. You will undertake the University of Sheffield Doctoral Development Programme and receive training in research design, qualitative methods, quantitative data analysis, academic writing and research impact.

The institution welcomes applicants from relevant disciplines including sociology, economics, education, human resource management, political economy, geography, business and management, or related social sciences. Applicants should have an interest in youth transitions, apprenticeships, skills policy, labour markets or regional development, and a willingness to work with policymakers and external stakeholders.

Candidates should possess strong critical thinking and analytical skills, including the ability to engage fully with a wide range of theoretical literatures. The candidate should also have experience of collecting primary data, ideally qualitative and quantitative, and have experience analysing data and presenting findings. Additional training will be provided.

Applicants should have, or expect to obtain, an undergraduate degree equivalent to a UK upper second-class honours degree or above, and a Masters level qualification at Merit or above. English language requirements are IELTS 7.0 overall, with at least 6.5 in each component, or equivalent.

Applicants must submit an online application and a fully referenced research proposal of approximately 3,000 words, excluding bibliography, based on this project. Informal enquiries are welcome: edward.yates@sheffield.ac.uk<sup>272</sup>.
